*Registration is required

Ben Juvelier is the Program Officer for education and research at the American Society of International Law (ASIL) and contributor to ASIL's Careers in International Law, a practical guide to pursuing the practice of international law. Ben will discuss the steps that students can take while still in law school to help them stand out in the search for an international law position. Topics covered will include targeted job searching, resume drafting, managing your professional contacts, identifying appropriate international experiences, pursuing valuable volunteer and professional membership opportunities, and other practical issues that students can pursue.
